Mr. A.Sai Kishore Garu explained that Office automation means varied computer machinery and software used to digitally create, collect, store, manipulate, and relay office information needed for accomplishing basic tasks. Raw data storage, electronic transfer, and the management of electronic business information comprise the basic activities of an office automation system. Office automation helps in optimizing or automating existing office procedures and in laboratories. The backbone of office automation is a local area network, which allows users to transfer data, mail and voice across the network.

All office functions, including dictation, typing, filing, copying, fax, telex, microfilm and records management, telephone and telephone switchboard operations, fall into this category. Advantages of office automation include that it can get many tasks accomplished faster, it eliminates the need for a large staff, less storage is required to store data, and multiple people can update data simultaneously in the event of changes in schedule.

All the non-teaching faculty members were attended to this training program and has gained very important knowledge on using computers in their professional responsibilities.
